Humans in the Natural World – The Putney School

Position Summary:
Full-time faculty members teach four courses per year, are engaged in the afternoon and/or evening programs, and serve as dorm parents and advisors.  For this position, we seek an English teacher who can weave a strong love of literature and writing instruction into an integrated 9th grade course called Humans in the Natural World.  Curriculum design and collaboration are essential to the work.  The team of teachers (English, Science, History) design and teach in tandem.

The ideal candidate will be inquisitive, interested in educational design, engaged by Putney's mission and creative ethos, a strong collaborator, energetic, and committed to working with adolescents. Three years of teaching experience in English is a starting point, the ability to teach Latin to individual students if asked is a plus.  Candidates need the academic background and general aptitude and attitude to teach in interdisciplinary courses.

Interested candidates should send a letter of interest and a resume to
